

Mission in digital frontiers

a learning day with Andrew Jones

Andrew Jones aka Tall skinny Kiwi travels the world with his family in a 4x4 truck. They seek to see the world that God loves, to eat unusual food and to help change the world by telling stories, throwing parties, making friends and giving gifts. Andrew is interested in spirituality and religion as it collides with new media and the emerging culture. His CV includes Director of Boaz and Missional Cell Developer for Church Missionary Society (UK).

Thursday 28 April 2011
1:30pm - 3:00pm
Pioneering lessons

Pioneering is hard work and Andrew Jones has been doing it, and seeing it, for over 20 years. This session offers some wisdom on sustainability, dealing with difficulty and building creative partnerships. It is by invite only, by simply asking the Uniting College for the pioneer password. The aim is to encourage folk with a pioneering heart and is jointly hosted by Mission Resourcing Network and Uniting College.

3:45pm - 5:15pm
Social media as fresh expressions of mission

The digital world is a fast moving frontier. This session will explore the potential of blogs, Facebook, Twitter for congregations and communities in mission. The content will cover getting started, strategies for effective networks and the shape of mission theology for a digital world. The aim of this session is to both upskill and encourage local churches to think about their use of the internet.

7:00pm - 8.30pm
Social media and justice-making in God's mission

This session will explore the relationship between social media and justice-making. Can the use of social media be an outworking of "Your Kingdom Come"? If so, how? The session will share stories from around the globe mixed with theological reflection. The aim is to explore the potential and pitfalls that face those surfing the digital frontier.
